

The Sword, The Ring and The Mirror Pt 4: John and The Thousand Pieces

General Description of the Series
The Sword, the Ring, and the Mirror is a pentalogy, in 6 volumes, [part 5 is split into two volumes] although each tale is a standalone tale in its own right. Primarily aimed at the teen/young adult market, many older readers of fantasy will also find much escapism and enjoyment in these fantasies with a twist. The series is almost half a million words long, but the reader will find themselves effortlessly drawn into this fantasy/adventure set in the middle ages, a traditional swords and sorcery style of literature with non-stop action throughout that hides a true underlying theme. It reinforces the idea that good will always overcome evil if a person shows courage, determination, honesty and a true sense of what is right and underlines the real meaning of true friendship. John, the hero throughout the series, needs to undertake a series of perilous journeys into the strange and dangerous land of the Faerie where he meets up with a champion faerie swordsman, and between them they battle trolls and monsters in order to achieve their true aims. Each journey becomes more involved and more dangerous, and from the third book John is joined by an extremely feisty young girl called Fawn who causes him no end of problems. Initially they hate each other, but as they face one terrible danger after another a truce is called and a true friendship developed. The adventures of John and his friends, however, are related to another young boy, who is lying ill in a hospital, by a mysterious person who appears in the night, and at the very end, this mysterious person reveals an amazing secret.

Description
On their way back from attending a wedding in a neighbouring village, John, and his fiery distant cousin Fawn decide to take a short break in the mountains before attending a ball that Fawn really doesn't want to go to at all. But the holiday has to be swiftly abandoned when a pack of hell-hounds leave them with no alternative but to return just to escape them. Once they are there they find they cannot get back, and in no time at all they become aware that a new dark force called Elohim is hunting them. Trying desperately hard to stay one step ahead of the forces of darkness that are hunting them, they have to rescue Grimm from Grenellas fortress in order to recover a crystal that Elohim desires so desperately he will stop at nothing. In a race against time they flee for the safety of Eagle Mountain, but Elohim traps them before they can succeed. With all his friends turned to stone, Fawn in the clutches of the trolls, with evil harpies wheeling menacingly overhead, John has only seconds within which to solve the riddle of the crystal before Elohim strikes him down. Extract p 43The crashing sounds came closer, accompanied by incredibly deep throaty roars, and then through the trees they saw a huge gout of flame shooting out, filling the air with a dense cloud of smoke. A tree went crashing to the ground as a huge body came thrusting forward through the smoke, and the ground shook with the ponderous tread of the advancing monster. John strained as hard as he could against the ropes that held them so tightly, but it was hopeless. There really seemed to be no hope at all. Fawn, youre quite something; for a girl that is! John cried over the deafening racket that was building up around them. And if I get out of this in one piece Im going to black your eye! she shouted back defiantly. With a bellow of animal fury the thing that had been advancing through the trees suddenly burst into the clearing. Roaring and snarling in a horrifying manner, emitting enormous clouds of smoke and flame, it towered menacingly over them. They braced themselves for the terrible fate that was now about to overtake them.
