

Sequel to Experience of a Boy (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from Sequel to Experience of a Boy Californians were so imbued with the glorious conditions that they were loud in their praises of their city, their country, and their climate. Their city was bound to rival New York in size; their country had the richest soil in the world and the weather conditions were superb; they had the prettiest women and the healthiest children; in fact, nothing could be uttered by a true Californian too flattering for this earthly paradise. The remark was often made that you had only to tickle the earth with a hoe to raise anything that would grow elsewhere in the Tropic or Temperate Zones. The mines were rich in all the precious metals, and silver and gold being so accessible, why should they use paper money? They did not, and when a tenderfoot would try to pass a bill, good everywhere else in the United States, he would be surprised at the indifferent manner with which it was refused. Their mountains were many and high. Their plains were level, wide and long, extending far beyond the power of vision. A gentleman from Vermont in answer to a naturally warm description by a native while passing over one of these valleys, level as a barn floor, stated: By gad! If I owned ten acres of it, I would build a hill on it. About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books.
