Not illustrated. 1889 Excerpt: ...manhood came, And with it sense of right and wrong; I saw twas better to be just, Than, lacking justice, brave and strong. With thoughts of peace and words of love, In future let my mind be stored; To Justice, friend of all mankind, I dedicate my fathers sword. A MODERN INFERNO. A REALISTIC POEM. Bring me pigments dark and deep, The shadow that Rembrandt wove: The infernal tints of a demon brush That shall keep out the light of love--The deep green tints and the crimson hues Of a sacrificial grove! Give me the power of Dantes pen, The force of a fiend inspired, And let me picture that horrid court Where Famine and sin conspired, Where clods of men from a horrid den, Howl blasphemies untired. Shut out all human sympathy That would throw a glamour oer me, And cause me to picture a fairer scone Than that which mine eyes can see; I Want to startle the World with sin, And must be stern and free! I want no softening shades to blend When ruggedness tells the tale; No pencil tipped with eiderdown To cover the truth with a veil; My story should harrow the souls of men, And turn the strongest pale. No matter how dark be my deepest shade, A darker must linger beneath; The laugh I am stretching my hand to paint, Must come with a poisonous breath; The smile that I place on Delilahs cheek, Must wither and scorch like death. Tis the dwelliug spot of an outcast race, In the midst of a Christian land, Which the Spirit of Evil long ago Subdued with her mighty wand--Where every living soul is marked With an everlasting brand! Tis a refuge where idleness loves to dwell, A duct of infernal slime; The leper ground of a doomed race, The nestling place of crime--Where clansmen tryst with robber chiefs Of kindred race and clime! M tis a spot where the light of a Christ...
