Then with a stronger buffet he cleft the helm As throughly³ as the skull; and out from this Issued the bright face of a blooming boy Fresh as a flower new-born, and crying, Knight, 1375 Slay me not: my three brethren bade me do it, 1 dwelt. 2 Even the earth hides the dead with flowers rather than with signs of Humming. 3 entirely. To make a horror all about the house, And stay the world from Lady Lyonors. o They never dreamd the passes would be past. Answerd Sir Gareth graciously to one 1380 Not many a moon his younger, My fair child, What madness made thee challenge the chief knight Of Arthurs hall? Fair Sir, they bade me do it. They hate the King, and Lancelot, the Kings friend, They hoped to slay him somewhere on the stream, 1385 They never dreamd the passes could be past. Then sprang the happier day from under-ground; And Lady Lyonors and her house, with dance And revel and song, made merry over Death, As being after all their foolish fears 1390 And horrors only provn a blooming boy. So large mirth lived, and Gareth won the quest. And he that told the tale in older times Says that Sir Gareth wedded Lyonors, But he, that told it later, says Lynette.1 1 He that told the tale in older times Gareth had really fought for Lynette, and is Malory (p. 9), Bat Tennyson feels that that it is Lynette whom he should win. 1 in her thoughts. an archaic word. embroidered.
